

Sociology

The overall objective of the undergraduate degree in Sociology is to train students with the theoretical and methodological conceptual foundations needed for the scientific knowledge of society and needed to contribute to social welfare.

Undergraduates with training in Sociology will be able to:

- Become familiar with the major theories of human society and its social dynamics, taking into account the main sociological schools.
- Analyze the evolution and transformations of contemporary societies, incorporating interdisciplinary knowledge.
- Know the structures and functioning of social organizations and the main social actors.
- Develop the necessary skills to apply these concepts and skills in their professional practice.
- Acquire the technical skills necessary to design and implement social research projects.

Career opportunities:

Sociology undergraduates have high levels of employment in Spain: around 81% are in paid employment situation and at least an additional 7% more are working in the so-called "Third Sector".

The main areas of employability of graduates in Sociology are: Social Intervention, Applied Social Research, Education, Labour Organization and Public Policies.

Furthermore, there is a great demand for Sociology undergraduates in Andalusia, especially in government (Junta de Andalucía) and other political entities (political parties, associations, etc.). It is important to take into account the presence of numerous companies engaged in market studies, opinion surveys, marketing, advertising, etc.

This undergraduate degree can also lead to access to a Master and Doctoral program.

Learning: Classroom-based teaching

Language of teaching: Spanish

Type: EHEA bachelor's degree

Credits: 240 (60 per year)